

It was another wonderful and fun meeting day for the Southern Colorado Pulmonary Hypertension Group, serving the Pikes Peak Region in Colorado. Our leader and one of the Group's co-founders, Stacy Durham, came up with a brainstorm to design a banner/flag for the upcoming Pulmonary Hypertension Association's International Conference to be held in California.

As is the norm of our Group, we had three folks jump on the task at hand--Karen Goldman, Eniza Arjona, and Scott Deitchman. Eniza and Karen were known as the ones with special art talent in our Group. The newly-designated Banner/Flag Committee made arrangements to meet at Karen's home the next week for the making of the new banner, with each volunteer to bring some pre-work.

The following week the volunteers and their caregivers met at Karen's home in Monument, Colorado. In a short period of time, there was no question--Eniza, Scott, and Karen were off like busy bees in developing the banner. As was the norm, Karen had many designs she had worked on all week, as she wanted to be part of one of the best banners to be designed in the country.

As the team finished the outstanding artwork, they commenced working on the logo words. After a bucket full of ideas were tabled, Karen pulled out a napkin with these words jotted down—care, share, be aware! In a very short time, the team decided the words fit and proceeded to design them into the newly-developed banner of the Southern Colorado Pulmonary Hypertension Group

Submitted by Lou Goldman and Tina Deitchman
March 4, 2005

